On Monday last, somewhere between Sterling and Manti, two well-known young men decided to settle their differences by physical prowess, and their future good fellowship was attested in blood. Each had their faces duly decorated by the other's fists, but now all is serene along the Wabash, and friends they intend to remain.

A delightful dinner party was given last Sunday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Beauregard Kenner. The table was laden with the choicest of viands served in superior style, and after dining, the company was regaled with music and social converse, until the resources of the dining room were again drawn upon and a dainty supper served. As a host and hostess Mr. and Mrs. Kenner are unsurpassed and all present enjoyed a most delightful evening. The editor of the Messenger was a specially honored guest.

On Sunday last, in this city, Mrs. Annie N. Dinesen, aged 51, passed to her eternal rest. The deceased was the wife of Hans Dinesen, Sr., and had been a helpless invalid for several years, losing her eyesight also during the past year. Funeral services were held in the tabernacle on Tuesday afternoon, and a large number of friends paid their last tributes of respect to the deceased who in life had been a patient sufferer and a woman of most estimable qualities. The sincere sympathy of the community goes out to Mr. Dinesen in this time of sad bereavement, and the hope is that he may be comforted in his loneliness by a full measure of that Spirit which is as a balm and blessing in the hour of trial and need.

A couple claiming to hail from Richfield, arrived in this city last Saturday. They were accompanied by a young man about 5 years of age, claiming both parties as his papa and mamma, respectively. The couple were in search of a marriage license, and the deputy clerk of the court said he never witnessed the effects of love take a course similar to cause the would-be bridegroom to forget his proper name, — give one name and sign another, especially when the love-lorn swain was old enough to know better. He classed himself as being forty-three years old, and his wife to be at 21. The actions of the couple here, brought reminders of former elopements and other irregularities outside the strict letter of the Matrimonial law, when Cupid is supposed to be as eminently proper and decorous as a wax figure, and it seemed as though the young lady required much persuasion after the license had been secured before she consented to be united for better or worse. However, it is alleged that the couple were enjoying a prenuptial honeymoon that was all of bliss, and after they got ready and duly recovered the services of our good bishop, they closed the deal in wedlock and left on Wednesday for parts unknown.
